Kaleidoscope Mosque
It's also known as the "Pink Mosque" for the rose-colored tiles that cover the interior. However, picking out just one color doesn't do justice to the plethora of hues that decorate it. The Nasir al-Mulk Mosque or Pink Mosque is a traditional mosque in Shiraz, Iran, located in Goode-e-Arabian place (near the famous Shah Cheragh mosque). The mosque was built during the Qajar era, and is still in use under protection by Nasir al Mulk's Endowment Foundation. It was by the order of Mirza Hasan Ali Nasir al Molk, one of the lords of the Qajar 80, in 1876 and was finished in 1888. The designers were Muhammad Hasan-e Memar and Muhammad Reza Kashi Paz-e-Shiraz.

Squares are the actual building blocks of design, ever since the first video games came out. Every graphic, every illustration was created with a pixel. Here I go back to the basics to explore the fundamentals.

NERVOUS

The tension is created by the squares that are literally on edge. They are nervous about what to do with themselves; they don't exactly fit together. A sense of claustrophobia is present because the squares have no room to breathe.

SOMBER

An unsettling darkness is slowly enveloping the white space. The bars seem to drip with depression and are taking over the whole box. What was once a clear distinction between black and white has become a somber, aimless, gray area.

JOYFUL

The roundness of this figure is childlike, reminiscent of joyful days in sunshine, flowers blooming, and floating bubbles. The different-sized squares are carried by airy and ample space as they easily drift upward.

METICULOUS

Being meticulous is striving for order which is essentially aiming for a sense of wholeness. This also involves being detail-oriented, which is an attempt to spread zen from inside the mind and body to the physical world and vice versa.
